Motor Kills Squirrel.
OMAHA, Neb., May 24.—Puss, the old fox squirrel, who was the mother or grandmother of nearly all the bushy tailed inhabitants of Baylis Park, met instant death the other afternoon when a motor car speeding past the Elks' clubhouse, ran squarely across her body.

Perhaps 1,000,000 squirrels all over the land answer to the name of Puss, but the Puss of Baylis Park was a very unusual squirrel. Puss accepted every human being as her friend, and no stranger ever tried to harm Puss. Although Puss had about the widest acquaintance of anybody in Council Bluffs, she also had a circle of "intimates."

The many salesmen who stopped at the Grand Hotel, across from the park, used to stop on each trip to converse with Puss. Big Earl Allen, the largest patrolman on the Council Bluffs force, stopped to talk with Puss half a dozen times a day as he went his rounds. Puss liked the big policeman.

The "peanut man," whose wagon stands at the corner of the park, fed these later generations of squirrels Puss every day. Puss would crawl fearlessly inside of his steaming shop to scratching all over the park, seeking for the choice nuts that Puss had hidden under the sod for a rainy day, where she spent her days. A few of her descendants from the "treetops," "squirrel food." Puss wouldn't need watched the park caretaker and the them now, they evidently reasoned.
